What does this mean? Fortitude is a must but preparation for battle is not about winning or losing but about knowing yourself, the real battle is decision making. Hegel was on to something with his dialectic...so was Newton.

The statement reflects a philosophical and strategic perspective on preparation, decision-making, and understanding oneself.

Breaking It Down:

1. "Fortitude is a must but preparation for battle is not about winning or losing but about knowing yourself":

- Fortitude: Refers to courage and resilience.
- Preparation for battle: This can be both literal and metaphorical, indicating readiness for challenges.
- Not about winning or losing: Emphasizes that the outcome is not the sole focus.
- Knowing yourself: Self-awareness and understanding one's strengths, weaknesses, and motivations are crucial.

2. "The real battle is decision making":

- Highlights that the true challenge lies in making informed and wise decisions rather than the physical or external conflicts themselves.

3. "Hegel was on to something with his dialectic...so was Newton":

- Hegel's Dialectic: A philosophical framework where progress occurs through the conflict of opposites (thesis, antithesis, and synthesis). It implies understanding and resolving contradictions within oneself and in external situations.
- Newton: Likely referring to his laws of motion, particularly the third law, which states that for every action, there is an equal and opposite reaction. This can be seen as a metaphor for anticipating consequences and balancing actions.

Interpretation:

The statement suggests that true strength lies in inner resilience and self-awareness. The essence of preparation and conflict is not merely about the outcome but understanding oneself deeply and making well-considered decisions. It connects philosophical ideas from Hegel and scientific principles from Newton to emphasize the importance of recognizing and addressing contradictions and consequences in decision-making.
